

Canine Therapy

The dog the best friend and rehabilitator

Consists in the intervention with people through a dog that has received a series of training.

Petting a dog helps to:

Regulate blood pressure values.

Regulate the frequency of breathing and heartbeat.

Enables the increase of social relationships in people with communication problems.

Encourages patient responsibility.

Encourages friendship between owners.

Helps improve and promote physical, mental, sensory, social or behavioral abilities..

From the psychological point of view dogs adopt an affective attitude and great attachment to the human being without making judgments of value and are by our side faithfully throughout its life.

The therapies with dogs are not considered substitutes of any medical treatment, but on the contrary, they complement medical or psychological treatments, with health problems, behavior or personality.
